Dear

I think that there are good points in the letter, but I do not seem to see the point which I call the third point, namely, the important one which is that of having the correlating agencies, The Department of State, Department of Defense and Central Intelligence Agency particularly tied together in a group such as the Psychological Strategy Board, in order that policy people in the respective organizations can correlate policy in one form like the PSB, thus preventing a lot of loose ends and the consumption of time by having to see different groups of people in order to make policy decisions.

Sincerely,

S/ Roger M. Kyes
